On the one hand it is a language course, where students are trained in speaking, reading and writing modern Icelandic. Subjects covered include morphology, syntax and phonetics of modern Icelandic. The students read both old and modern literature and learn about the history of Iceland from settlement to modern times. Additionally, students are introduced to translation.

Icelandic as a second language, at the University of Iceland, School of Humanities

It is important that grant recipients arrive timely in Iceland. The autumn term begins in the latter part of August. An introductory session with new students will be held before the beginning of the academic year where the organisation and requirements for the study programme will be presented.

Information on the current programmes of study and examination procedures is available at the University's website (the programme may be subject to change): <https://english.hi.is/node/52390>

The first-year in Icelandic as a second language, BA programme, is designed for students with some prior knowledge in the language. The candidates must have a working knowledge of English, since English will serve as a second language in teaching.

The admission exam for the BA programme will be held online in the second week in June each year. The University of Iceland will inform accepted grantees directly about the day and time.

Students with considerable prior knowledge of Icelandic may move directly into the second year by passing examinations held in August. Grantees must contact the University of Iceland directly in order to register for the exam in August.

As a rule, foreign students holding the Icelandic Ministry of Culture and Business Affairs scholarship are expected to follow the programme in line with their previous knowledge of Icelandic, whether they intend to complete the BA-degree or not.

Students that begin their studies in autumn are required to pass exams at the end of the term to be able to continue their studies for the spring term of the programme. The scholarship holders have to pass examinations in the end of the fall term to be eligible for the scholarship in the spring.
